Deep Cuts in the Frontline

Proposed Cuts to Human Services

The governor’s proposed state budget cuts for fiscal year 2011 total $116.5 million, or 18.2 percent, of the Department of Human Services’ (DHS) budget. However, the budget includes federal American Recovery and Reinvestment Act funds; without them, the proposed budget cuts would total $124.8 million, or 19.5 percent. (Figures compare the FY 2011 budget to the pre-recession FY 2009 budget.)

Proposed Direct Service Cuts

- Eliminating 137 eligibility workers who assist applicants for Food Stamps, Medicaid, and Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF).
- Cutting Elder Community Living Service contracts by $2.7 million, thereby eliminating or reducing services to older Georgians living in their communities, such as respite care and kinship care for grandparents raising their grandchildren.
- Cutting investment in Child Welfare Services by $7 million, including shifting in-home case management from private providers to the Department of Family and Children Services without increasing the number of caseworkers.

Recommendation

Lawmakers Should Know Their Options Beyond Cuts: New federal money for food stamp administration is available through September 2011. Georgia should use the $14.9 million in new funds available to increase the number of eligibility workers and to expand outreach to newly eligible families.

Using a balanced approach to budgeting would also reduce the cuts, such as including more revenues by increasing the cigarette tax; enacting a new income tax rate on those earning more than $400,000 per year; suspending or ending special interest tax breaks; updating the sales tax base; increasing fees; and closing corporate loopholes.
